In the previous chapters, you explored activities preparing you to interpret and develop a role from a playwright's script. You used imagination, concentration, observation, sensory recall, and movement to become aware of your personal resources. You used vocal exercises to prepare your voice for creative vocal expression. Improvisation and characterization activities provided opportunities for you to explore simple character portrayal and plot development. All of these activities were preparatory techniques for acting. Now you are ready to bring a character from the written page to the stage.

The Structure of Plays

LESSON OBJECTIVES

- Understand the dramatic structure of a play.
- Recognize several types of plays.
- Understand how a play is organized.

Warm-Up

As a class, play a short game of charades. Use the titles of plays and musicals or the names of famous actors.

Much of an actor’s time is spent working from materials written by playwrights. You have probably read plays in your language arts classes. Thus, you probably already know that a play is a story written in dialogue form to be acted out by actors before a live audience as if it were real life.

Other forms of literature, such as short stories and novels, are written in prose form and are not intended to be acted out. Poetry also differs from plays in that poetry is arranged in lines and verses and is not written to be performed.
Plays have distinguishing characteristics that make the style easy to recognize. These characteristics—the way a play is put together—make up what is often called the play’s dramatic structure.

The Elements of a Play

The dramatic structure of a play dates back to 335 B.C., when Aristotle described the six basic parts, or elements, of a play. Playwriting has changed through the years, but Aristotle’s basic components of plot, character, thought, diction, song, and spectacle still exist to some extent in all plays. Still, different plays may place more importance on one component than on another. In some plays, plot is the key ingredient. Others might feature spectacle. In still others, song might be the most important feature. Today, many teachers refer to the six basic parts of dramatic structure as plot, character, theme, language, music, and spectacle.

Plot. Aristotle tells us that the plot is the arrangement of the incidents that take place in a play. A plot has three basic parts: the beginning, middle, and end. The beginning introduces the audience to who, what, where, when, and why through revealing information called exposition. The middle is composed of a series of complications or conflicts, which result in a climax, or turning point. In the final part of the plot, the conflict is resolved and the story ends.

Character. The plot of the play is carried out through the action and dialogue of personalities or figures called characters. It is through these characters that the playwright reveals his or her message. The principal character, who represents the main thought of the play, is called the protagonist. Standing in the protagonist’s way and opposing the protagonist is a character known as the antagonist. All other important characters in the play will side with one of these two characters.

Thought/Theme. Playwrights have an overall meaning, or basic idea, that they wish to get across through the play. This idea, known as the thought or theme, ties the characters and events together and gives the play purpose. The theme of a play is usually suggested, or implied, rather than directly stated.

Diction/Language. The playwright tells the story of the play through words, or language. Careful selection of language gives the audience a better understanding of the type of play, the characters, and the plot. The lines of the play and even the stage directions are all considered the language of a play.

Song/Music. During Aristotle’s time, Greek plays were chanted or sung, often accompanied by musical instruments. In today’s theatre, song, or music, includes the sound and characteristics of the actors’ voices, as well as songs, instruments, recorded background music, and even sound effects. These musical elements are used to establish mood and enhance believability in a play.
Spectacle. The last of Aristotle’s six elements is spectacle. Spectacle includes all visual elements of production. Today, scenery, properties, lighting, costumes, makeup, stage movement, and dance are all used to create spectacle in theatre. Although scenes and plays can certainly be staged without these elements, the addition of some form of spectacle enhances most productions.

Organization of a Play

The first Greek plays ran continuously from beginning to end without a break. It was Horace (65–8 B.C.), a Roman poet, who was the first writer to divide a play into five acts. An act is a major division of a play. Breaking up the action of a play is now a common practice. Today, most plays are divided into two or three acts, and many plays have just one act. Acts can be further divided into sections called scenes. Thus, a scene is a subdivision of an act. Scenes are often used to show the change of location or the passing of time. (See Figure 8–1 on the following page.)

Types of Plays

As you work with different scenes and plays, you will begin to notice the different ways that plays are classified. One play may be called a tragedy, while another may be considered a comedy. Let’s look at what makes plays different.

The oldest type of dramatic literature is the tragedy. A tragedy deals with a serious situation in a serious way. In a tragedy, the protagonist dies or is defeated at the end of the play. Tragedies are often named after the defeated hero or heroine. Antigone, Romeo and Juliet, and The Diary of Anne Frank are all examples of tragedies.

A drama is also a play dealing with a serious subject in a serious way. It differs from a tragedy in that the protagonist does not die and is not defeated at the end. In fact, the drama often offers hope for the protagonist’s situation. Some dramas that you might enjoy reading are Little Women, The Chalk Garden, The Miracle Worker, and Raisin in the Sun.

Another type of dramatic literature is the comedy. A comedy presents both theme and characters in a humorous way. A popular comedy plot involves two young people who are in love but who almost don’t get together. After several complicated situations, the characters finally overcome the opposition and come together at the end of the play. The Importance of Being Earnest, The Taming of the Shrew, Butterflies Are Free, and The Star Spangled Girl are all comedies.

Often a play is a mixture of both comedy and tragedy. One of the most common mixtures is the melodrama. A melodrama is an exaggerated, fast-moving play in which action is more important than characterization. In the melodrama, there is a clear-cut distinction between good and evil. In the end, we see the “good guys” win and the “bad guys” punished. Melodramas that you may have read or viewed on videotape are Dracula, Deathtrap, and Dial “M” for Murder.

1. Reading a Play
   a. Select and read a one-act play.
   b. Identify each of Aristotle’s six elements. Describe how these elements are used in the play you have read.
   c. Prepare a short written report on the play you have read. Plan to discuss your work with your acting company or class.
